Training Methodology:

The 'Work Breakdown Structure WBS' course uses a mix of project management topics, case studies, interactive sessions, and real-world scenarios for practical understanding. Our training for project management incorporates the latest trends and challenges faced by project managers, making the course content relevant and timely.

First, we lay a strong theoretical foundation by discussing concepts of project management, focusing on the importance of a comprehensive work breakdown structure. We provide detailed insights into project initialization, risk management for project managers, and the strategic project management scope of work. This theory-based approach helps participants to understand the 'why' behind each process, making the subsequent hands-on experience more meaningful.

In interactive sessions, we facilitate group discussions on case studies, representing different industries and project scenarios. This method enables participants to appreciate the versatility of the work breakdown structure, see its applications in various settings, and also learn from peers' experiences.

We further augment the learning process with real-world scenarios, allowing participants to apply learned principles in managing a project. Participants will understand the project management statement of work, create their own work breakdown structure, and be able to assess risks, manage project team, and drive towards a project breakthrough. These scenarios give participants the experience of what is a work breakdown structure in action, helping to bridge the gap between theory and practice.

Our project management training programs also include regular reflection and review sessions to reinforce learning. We believe in an active learning process, with participants playing a crucial role in their skill development. In this project manager training, each participant will not just learn but also contribute to the learning of others.
