Community Mental Health & Social Change: A Training Course in Liberation Psychology

Ref: 103600364_36562 Date: 25 – 29 October 2027 Location: Prague Fees: 6000 Euro

Course Overview:

The course is designed to empower professionals working at the intersection of mental health and social justice. Drawing from the foundational insights of "Community Psychology" by Geoffrey Nelson and Isaac Prilleltensky, this course bridges theory and practice to address real-world challenges. It integrates community psychology training, liberation psychology concepts, and ecological models in psychology to cultivate inclusive mental health leadership. Participants will explore the social determinants of mental health, community-based interventions, power dynamics in communities, and critical perspectives on mental health. Through cultural competence in psychology and grassroots mental health initiatives, learners will be equipped with methods to foster recovery, resilience, and systemic transformation.

Target Audience:

- Community psychologists
- Social workers
- Public health professionals
- Mental health clinicians
- Human rights advocates
- Organizational development consultants
- Educators and policy-makers in health and social care

Targeted Organizational Departments:

Course Offerings:

By the end of this course, participants will be able to:

- Apply ecological models in psychology to real-world mental health challenges
- Design empowerment-based mental health programs
- Evaluate social determinants of mental health in marginalized communities
- Use values in community psychology to guide program development
- Integrate cultural competence and inclusive practices into interventions
- Analyze power dynamics in community contexts
- Plan and assess community-based interventions for psychological well-being

Training Methodology:

This course uses a participatory and experiential learning model rooted in critical pedagogy. Training will include case studies of grassroots mental health initiatives, role plays around power dynamics in communities, and group activities focused on social intervention planning. Guided discussions will explore the interplay between marginalisation and psychological well-being. Using real-life scenarios from the textbook and field, participants will apply transformative and participatory research methods. Each day concludes with a structured reflection to reinforce learning and promote personal insights. Materials are grounded in empowerment-based mental health frameworks, promoting inclusive psychological practices.

How This Course is Different from Other Community Mental Health Courses:

The course stands out by grounding every element in the liberation psychology framework, going beyond symptom-based approaches to tackle the root causes of mental distress. Unlike many courses that treat mental health as an individual issue, this course trains participants to recognise systemic oppression, power imbalances, and cultural contexts. Using methods from the book by Nelson and Prilleltensky, it emphasizes empowerment, ecological thinking, and participatory methods. This course not only enhances knowledge but also builds real-world skills for social transformation through community-based mental health strategies, critical reflection, and cross-sector collaboration.
