FAQ:

What specific qualifications or prerequisites are needed for participants before enrolling in the course?

There are no formal prerequisites. However, participants should have a foundational understanding of HR practices or hold roles in human resources, employee relations, or managerial positions.

How long is each day's session, and is there a total number of hours required for the entire course?

Each day's session is generally structured to last around 4-5 hours, with breaks and interactive activities included. The total course duration spans five days, approximately 20-25 hours of instruction.

What's the difference between employee voice and employee communication?

According to Armstrong's Handbook, employee voice refers to the various ways through which employees express their opinions, contribute ideas, and influence decision-making, whereas employee communication refers to the structured approaches and systems through which information is transmitted from management to employees and vice versa.

How This Course is Different from Other Employee Relations and Services Courses:

This course transcends standard employee relations courses by providing a strategic learning path inspired by Michael Armstrong's HRM framework, focusing on practical applications in service delivery, grievance management, communication, and employee engagement.

Additionally, the course covers HR metrics, proactive advisory strategies, and trust-building techniques. Participants enjoy an immersive experience featuring real-world applications, strategic role-playing, and customized toolkits, establishing it as a leading program for mastering employee relations and HR service management in today's organisations.
