Course Overview

The Editorial and Print Design: Modern Layout and Print Production Skills course provides an intensive professional pathway that helps participants understand and implement editorial and print design processes comprehensively, from concept development to producing high-quality printed materials.

The course is based on the principles of print design, printed graphic design, and visual communication as presented in the attached reference Print Communication Design Course. It focuses on using professional software such as Adobe InDesign, Illustrator, and Photoshop for print production. This enables participants to develop strong editorial works such as brochures, catalogs, posters, and printed advertisements.

The program offers a practical methodology that begins with establishing a deep understanding of typographic layout and visual hierarchies, and extends to art direction and visual storytelling using photography and illustration. Participants will also develop the ability to produce professional printed materials aligned with modern design standards.

The course also provides clear insights into how text and imagery can be integrated to create impactful corporate publications and targeted editorial content. Practical training will also cover preparing print-ready files and managing print production workflows, making the course ideal for designers, marketers, entrepreneurs, and creative teams within organizations.

Ultimately, the program supports participants in transitioning from basic knowledge to professional expertise while developing a strong visual sense aligned with the demands of today's editorial and print design industry.

FAQ

What prerequisites are required before enrolling in the course?

No advanced technical background is required. Basic computer knowledge and an interest in print and editorial design are sufficient. The course is suitable for beginners and intermediate participants.

How long is each daily session and what is the total course duration?

Each daily session lasts approximately 4–5 hours, including breaks and interactive activities. The full course runs for five days, totaling 20–25 hours.

How This Course Differs from Other Courses

This course goes beyond teaching technical tools by providing a comprehensive editorial and visual design perspective that integrates print design, printed graphic design, and visual communication, as presented in the Print Communication Design Course reference.

The program is based on practical applications inspired by real projects, giving participants hands-on experience in designing brochures, catalogs, posters, and corporate publications.

Unlike traditional courses that focus only on Adobe software, this course provides a holistic methodology integrating:

- typographic layout planning
- visual storytelling
- art direction
- professional print production

Participants will also gain the ability to manage print projects effectively and prepare final print-ready files, a critical skill that many design courses do not address.

Through practical exercises, participants will develop a strong visual sense and the ability to make informed design decisions, making this one of the most comprehensive and modern training programs in editorial and print design.
