

Disciplinary and Grievance Training: Employee Relations & Investigations

Disciplinary and Grievance Training: Employee Relations & Investigations

Course Overview:

Employee Disciplinary Action & Grievance is a practical corporate Disciplinary and Grievance Training programme designed to strengthen managers' and HR professionals' ability to manage workplace conduct, employee complaints, disciplinary cases, and grievances fairly, consistently, and professionally. The course combines Employee Discipline Training, Employee Grievance Training, Employee Relations Training, Workplace Investigations Training, and Disciplinary Procedures Training into one integrated programme.

The course follows the practical process reflected in the Acas guidance: address issues promptly, establish facts through appropriate investigation, communicate allegations clearly, allow employees to present their case, conduct fair disciplinary or grievance meetings, reach proportionate decisions, maintain appropriate records, and provide an appeal mechanism.

Participants explore how to conduct workplace investigations, manage employee misconduct, distinguish informal resolution from formal disciplinary action, handle grievances and complaints, and conduct disciplinary and grievance hearings. Special attention is given to evidence gathering, witness interviews, fact finding, disciplinary warnings, gross misconduct, grievance outcomes, workplace mediation, and appeals.

Daniel Barnett's Resolving Grievances further informs the programme's practical treatment of grievance investigation, meetings, decisions, appeals, difficult grievance situations, and post-process follow-up.

The result is a practical Employee Relations Course that helps organizations manage sensitive workplace issues while supporting procedural fairness, consistency, documentation, and constructive employee relations.

Training Methodology:

The programme uses a practical, case-driven learning methodology designed around realistic disciplinary, grievance, investigation, and employee relations situations. Short facilitator-led sessions introduce the essential principles behind Employee Discipline Training, Employee Grievance Training, Workplace Investigations Training, and Disciplinary Procedures Training before participants apply them to workplace cases.

Case studies are used to examine misconduct, repeated lateness, bullying allegations, discrimination concerns, policy breaches, poor conduct, evidence disputes, employee complaints, and potential gross misconduct. The Mike Parkin resource particularly supports this practical approach through its treatment of discipline investigations, evidence gathering, interviewing, report writing, and workplace misconduct cases.

Participants work through investigation scenarios involving documentary evidence, conflicting statements, witness interviews, and credibility issues. Role-based simulations recreate disciplinary meetings, grievance meetings, workplace investigation interviews, and appeal discussions. Group activities require participants to decide whether issues should be handled informally, through Workplace Mediation Training approaches, or under a formal Employee Disciplinary Procedure or Employee Grievance Procedure.

Facilitated feedback sessions then compare decisions against principles of fairness, consistency, reasonable investigation, clear communication, employee response rights, and appeals found throughout the Acas guidance.

The emphasis is therefore not merely on knowing a procedure, but on developing observable managerial capability in Conducting Workplace Investigations, Handling Employee Grievances, Managing Employee Misconduct, and conducting fair hearings.

FAQ:

What specific qualifications or prerequisites are needed for participants before enrolling in the course?

No formal legal or HR qualification is required. The course is suitable for HR professionals, employee relations specialists, managers, supervisors, team leaders, and other personnel who currently manage—or may be required to manage—employee conduct, workplace investigations, disciplinary procedures, grievances, hearings, or employee complaints. Prior workplace management experience is helpful but not essential.

How long is each day's session, and is there a total number of hours required for the entire course?

Each day's session is generally structured to last around 4–5 hours, with breaks and interactive activities included. The total course duration spans five days, approximately 20–25 hours of instruction.

Should a disciplinary process automatically stop when an employee raises a grievance?

Not necessarily. The appropriate response depends on the relationship between the grievance and disciplinary matter. If the grievance is connected to the same facts, it may be appropriate to address both issues within related or concurrent processes. If the grievance concerns separate matters, both processes may sometimes proceed concurrently. Where the grievance raises legitimate concerns about the impartiality or conduct of the person managing the disciplinary case, the organization should carefully consider whether another manager should handle the matter.

How This Course is Different from Other Employee Disciplinary Action & Grievance Courses:

Employee Disciplinary Action & Grievance goes beyond presenting HR policies or explaining disciplinary terminology. Its distinguishing feature is the integration of Employee Relations Training, Workplace Investigations Training, Disciplinary Hearing Training, Grievance Hearing Training, and practical decision-making into one end-to-end programme.

Participants learn not only what a disciplinary or grievance procedure says, but how to apply it when evidence is incomplete, employees disagree about what happened, witnesses provide conflicting accounts, allegations involve managers, grievances arise during disciplinary proceedings, or serious misconduct may lead to significant sanctions.

The programme gives investigation a central role. This reflects both the Acas guidance, which requires necessary investigations to establish the facts, and the supporting resources that emphasize evidence gathering, interviewing, investigation planning, and report writing. It also follows the complete grievance lifecycle described in Daniel Barnett's Resolving Grievances: receiving the grievance, investigating it, conducting the meeting, making a decision, managing appeals, and dealing with difficult cases.

Rather than treating Employee Discipline Training and Employee Grievance Training as separate administrative subjects, the course develops the practical judgment required to manage the entire employee relations case fairly, consistently, and professionally.
