Overview

Investor and Strategic Partner Due Diligence Course is a five-day advanced course for investment, corporate development, finance, partnership, risk, and governance teams, who leave with an Investor and Partner Due Diligence Decision File. Participants apply risk-based investor appraisal, strategic partner assessment, beneficial ownership verification, financial capacity analysis, and ongoing relationship monitoring. The course integrates strategic fit, integrity, conflicts, governance, evidence, risk grading, approval conditions, and onboarding controls. Agile Leaders Training Center delivers this investor and partner due diligence course.

Who Should Attend

- Investment functions responsible for screening potential investors and capital relationships
- Corporate development functions responsible for strategic alliances and partner selection
- Finance functions responsible for capacity evidence and funding assumptions
- Risk and compliance functions responsible for ownership, integrity, and relationship controls
- Governance functions responsible for approvals, conflicts, conditions, and oversight

The course assumes participants contribute to investor or partner decisions and leaves out transaction valuation, legal drafting, and AML investigations as standalone disciplines.

Departments and Industries

The course supports functions that assess external capital and business relationships across regulated and commercial sectors.

- Investment, corporate development, and partnership offices
- Banking, asset management, and private capital firms
- Energy, infrastructure, and industrial ventures
- Technology, telecommunications, and professional services
- Healthcare, education, and nonprofit organizations

Frequently Asked Questions

Who suits the Investor and Strategic Partner Due Diligence Course?

The course suits investment, corporate development, finance, partnership, risk, compliance, and governance functions and assumes participation in investor or partner decisions.

How does investor and partner due diligence differ from merger valuation?

Investor and partner due diligence evaluates relationship fit, ownership, capacity, integrity, conflicts, governance, evidence quality, and continuing controls, while merger valuation concentrates on financial and commercial value.

What should risk-based investor appraisal examine?

Risk-based investor appraisal should examine relationship purpose, ownership structure, source of funds, financial capacity, reputation, conflicts, governance, information reliability, exposure, and available controls.

How should beneficial ownership verification support partner assessment?

Beneficial ownership verification should connect legal entities to controlling individuals, document evidence sources, identify gaps or inconsistencies, and feed unresolved concerns into risk grading and escalation.

Why does strategic partner assessment require ongoing monitoring?

Ongoing monitoring detects changes in ownership, capacity, reputation, governance, conflicts, performance, or relationship exposure that may alter the original approval decision.

Conclusion

Participants take back an Investor and Partner Due Diligence Decision File with scope, evidence, risk, decision, and monitoring artifacts. The file replaces fragmented checks with a traceable assessment linked to relationship purpose. It clarifies information gaps, red flags, approval conditions, accountable owners, onboarding controls, escalation paths, and review triggers.
