Overview

Civil Transactions Law for Contracts and Obligations Course is a five-day advanced programme for legal counsel, contract managers, procurement professionals, compliance officers, finance managers, project leaders, and business executives. FAQs

What does the Civil Transactions Law cover?

The official law covers persons, property and rights, obligations, contracts, harmful acts and compensation, transfer and discharge of obligations, named contracts, real rights, final provisions, and general maxims.

Why should contract teams study the law?

It provides a framework for analysing how obligations arise, how contracts are interpreted and performed, and what follows from breach, transfer, discharge, harm, or compensation.

How does the Evidence Law relate to civil transactions?

Transaction decisions depend on provable facts and admissible evidence, so teams should coordinate drafting, notices, records, acknowledgements, communications, and retention with qualified guidance.

Does the course cover every named contract and real right?

No. It concentrates on cross-cutting contract and obligation issues. Specific transactions require the current official provisions and specialist advice.

Is this course legal advice?

No. Participants must verify the current official text, amendments, transitional provisions, related laws, and professional advice for their specific transaction or dispute.

Conclusion

Participants return with a Civil Transactions Contract and Obligations Review File linking legal sources, transaction classification, formation, interpretation, performance, breach, remedies, transfer, discharge, evidence, controls, and referral questions. It supports consistent internal review while preserving the role of qualified legal advice.
