FAQs

Who suits corporate debt restructuring and turnaround training, and what does it assume?

Finance managers, advisers, credit professionals, treasury leaders and turnaround executives suit the training. It assumes working knowledge of financial statements, cash flow and debt terms.

How does corporate debt restructuring differ from insolvency-law training?

Corporate debt restructuring focuses on financial diagnosis, viability, cash, creditor economics, options and implementation, while insolvency-law training concentrates on legal rights, procedures and jurisdiction-specific remedies.

What signals indicate a corporate debt restructuring may be needed?

Persistent cash deficits, covenant pressure, near-term maturity concentration, weak debt-service capacity, creditor escalation and a viable core business constrained by its capital structure can indicate a restructuring need.

Why is liquidity forecasting central to a financial turnaround?

Liquidity forecasting identifies the timing and size of funding gaps, supports cash-preservation choices and gives stakeholders a common evidence base for standstill, new-money and payment proposals.

What should a debt restructuring proposal contain?

A proposal should connect viability evidence, cash needs, creditor treatment, restructuring terms, operating initiatives, downside scenarios, milestones, reporting and governance in one traceable decision package.
